

Jeff Geyer has been the district Water Specialist since August 2016. His work allows him to dabble in every aspect of the hydrologic cycle including aquifer recharge, floodplain connectivity, stream restoration, wetland creation, snow catchment, water-wise landscaping and of course constructing fisheries for the residents of Laramie County. Though he has enjoyed and learned so much from so many different projects, his highlight reel would probably consist of the fishing pond, stream restoration, and wetland complex work he's completed in the Natura Area, Lodgepole Creek riparian pasture projects protecting more than 3-miles of Lodgepole Creek, and finally the Mariah Pasture Project which improved wildlife habitat, created a public land trout fishery and improved grazing utilization on a landscape scale. If he gets some free time, he loves to spend it with his wife and usually up on the mountain somewhere.
